SAVING FACE

The report has not been denied that the United States fleet based on Hawaii has headed for the East. This coincides with reports that Japanese resentment towards the United States has been fanned to a high degree over the alleged mistreatment of Japanese policemen in the international settlement at Shanghai by the United States Marines stationed there.

A mass meeting of 3,000 Japanese voiced flaming indignation against this country and it is understood that the Japanese high command has taken the position that its "honor" is involved in the demand for an apology. The Marine Corps commander has denied that the Japs were mistreated and nothing like an apology seems to be forthcoming from the State Department at Washington.

If the United States fleet is really headed for Oriental waters a spark may be lighted at any time which, in this surcharged atmosphere, may start a conflagration.

Oriental people attach a great deal of importance to an apology for an alleged injury. In that part of the world a man or government must "save face" at all costs.

A new ministry has just come into power at Tokyo. It is pledged to a more aggressive attitude than the old cabinet and its link with the axis partners in Europe is expected to be closer.

Whatever may be the facts as to the arrest of the Japanese policemen it is obvious that the government in this country will have to watch its step and that this is no time to start a quarrel which can be honorably avoided.

FINLAND, A GOOD RISK

Finland's plight was described by Hjalmar Procope, the Finnish minister, the other day. The situation of this brave people is desperate, typical of the cruelty and injustices of war.

The cost of the ill-fated defense against Russia was appalling, equal to an entire year's income of the country. The people of the ceded territories almost all have moved into unoccupied Finland and as refugees are a heavy burden. Trade and continuance of war conditions makes export all but impossible. Food supplies for the same reason are inadequate.

Minister Procope complains that, apart from $30,000,000 advanced by the RFC, he has been unable to obtain credits in this country. The reluctance of private capital to aid is a disillusioning blow, considering the praise Finland formerly had had as a credit risk. It is not hard to understand this caution, in light of the fate of neighboring countries now all but absorbed by Russia. But neither is it hard to appreciate why the Finns find it bitter.

Finland still is free, as Minister Procope says. A gamble on aiding Finland to remain free would seem worth taking.

If, as an eminent physician says, only intelligent persons suffer from hay fever, it looks as though the victims should get together some weekend and think up something to do about it.

The Great Game of Politics

velt will present a picture of an overburdened President who, without thought of politics and no concern about the election, is giving himself wholly to grappling with the grave problems created by the Hitler menace. And while he thus poses, the immense weight of the Administration will be exerted to continue him in office. Huge sums pouring out of the Federal Treasury in all directions will have the effect of a campaign fund and the vast publicity forces of the Administration, some paid and some unpaid, will attempt to smear the President's opponent.

AND if the opponent—or those who favor him—hit back—if they point out the fakery of the draft; the utter rot of the Indispensable Man theory; the blow at the American system involved in a third term; the havoc which the New Deal has wrought in our national life and the appalling state of our national finances as well as our national defense—if they do any of these things, there is a group of New Dealish writers—some of whom are on the pay roll—all set to reprove and rebuke; to assert that it is a dreadful thing to discuss such "trivialities"; to insist that Mr. Willkie is not alive to the tragic realities of a changed world.

THAT is the game, and from the Roosevelt standpoint it is extremely clever politics. It is, in fact, the only way his more acute friends think he can operate a successful campaign. And they have thought so from the start. Its advantages are obvious. It would relegate all domestic issues to the rear and stress only questions of defense and foreign policy, off which there is practically no difference between the candidates. The New Dealers could ask for nothing better. The most effective way to support Mr. Roosevelt's third-term attempt is to join in this effort to "lift" the fight to this plane and avoid what in a "changed world" are called trivial matters.

IT is—from the third-term angle—a grand idea, but it is not apt to sell. For one thing, the fraudulent nature of Mr. Roosevelt's "draft" and the extent to which he connived in it were so obvious that a Roosevelt pose now of not thinking of the election just would not register. No one would believe in it. It would be scented as another piece of fakery. For a second thing, contention that the third-term issue or the Federal finances or the Messianic complex of the President or the general New Deal philosophy or the incompetency and confusion of the New Deal regime are too trivial to discuss—that contention is too apparently absurd.

EVERYONE will admit that this is a changed world. It isn't necessary to point that out nor to explain that the problems of national defense and help to England are of transcendent importance. But, it would be foolish, indeed, to permit that fact to obscure every domestic issue and play into the hands of a crowd intent upon using the international situation as the instrument for smashing American traditions and perpetuating itself in power. It will neither slow down our defense preparations nor weaken our foreign policy to point out the mess which has been made of national affairs by a reckless and confused regime which has brought the country to the brink of bankruptcy and, as the "draft" showed, will resort to any degree of false pretense to hold on.

ON the contrary, it would seem vital to impress the people with the facts, so that in the great struggle ahead our foreign as well as domestic affairs may be in more competent and dependable hands. It was pointed out long before the convention that if Mr. Roosevelt tried for a third term, the fact that he was a candidate inevitably would saturate his every act before election with the suspicion of third-term politics. It was pointed out that that would be bad for the country—and it is very bad. But, having shoved aside that consideration and "drafted" himself, it becomes ridiculous for Mr. Roosevelt to assume an attitude of aloofness and for his friends to insist that, as he has "no thought of politics," the third term should not be discussed; that only international questions are real; that domestic questions, including the third-term issue, are unreal.

THAT is worse than slick politics—it is an attempt to conduct a campaign behind a cloak of false nonpartisanship. It is not going to help national defense, or anything else, to co-opt in it. And it is not likely to succeed. If Mr. Willkie cannot expose the humbuggery of this effort to "lift the campaign" above domestic questions, then he isn't the man his friends have been saying. As a matter of fact, it will not take much exposure. It is so patently false that it is incredible that many will be deceived.

"Flying Blind" by VERA BROWN

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

Judith and De Franc left the shop at six. They had a sandwich and cup of coffee at a drugstore and hopped into a cab. It carried them to a loft over on Seventh Avenue.

To Judith there seemed to be acres of hats in the big showroom. Under the high bright lights, she put on hats and took them off, until she was ready to scream. . . . It went on for hours until she had a splitting headache. It was ten o'clock before the hat matter was finally settled to De Franc's satisfaction.

The perspiring millinery maestro made the wholesaler promise to have the hats at the store in forty-eight hours. As they came out into the deserted street, De Franc insisted on buying a supper. She tried to beg off but he insisted. So they stopped at an oyster bar on 34th Street.

De Franc looked at her tired face; then declared: "You're the only woman I'd ever ask to marry me."

"I appreciate that honor, Mr. De Franc."

"Then why do you marry this Michael fellow. He's stupid!"

"He's not stupid, he's brilliant! He has one of the most fascinating jobs in the world. I love airplanes. We're going to have a grand life."

The somewhat mad hatter shook his head, dissatisfied. "If I knew any way, I'd break it up!"

Judith, in spite of her annoyance, laughed. "Nobody could do that!"

De Franc let her go finally, put her into a cab. It was almost eleven when she got to her apartment. The telephone was ringing when she came in, but before she could reach it, it stopped.

Michael? And she had missed his call. She got into a dressing gown, bathed her face, and lay down on the couch to wait. He would call again. In about fifteen minutes the phone rang again. She rushed to answer it.

"Hello, darling!" Judith's voice rang with relief. Then she stopped abruptly.

The man on the other end said: "I've got to see you!"

Judith couldn't speak from shock. It was Tex!

"I didn't know you were in town. That was all she could manage."

"Just flew in this morning. But I must see you."

"I'm afraid not tonight. It's very late."

"I've been waiting for hours. I'm just around the corner. I'll come over."

"No!"

"It's important." He hung up.

Judith was in a panic! She sat there without moving. She couldn't. Then the buzzer sounded. In a flash she slipped on a dark house-coat, ran a comb through her glossy hair. A sharp knock sounded on the door. Her hand trembled as she opened it.

Tex walked into the room. Without a word he took her into his arms and tried to kiss her. Judith knew Tex had been drinking.

"Is this the way to greet your old husband?"

"Really, Tex, it's too late at night to be flippant." She moved across the room, motioned him to the only comfortable chair. She sat on the couch. He did not sit down, but stood there looking down at her speculatively.

"You're getting pretty."

She smiled, getting a grip on herself. "That's not very gallant."

"Probably not, but we were never especially polite to each other."

"Let's not go into that. Why are you so anxious to see me?"

"Lonesome. That's the answer."

Now that she saw his face, she could trace new lines in it. He looked older and very tired. His boots with liquor were definitely recorded. He leaned down to touch her ring. "Hear you're getting married soon?"

"Yes."

"Dudley's the kind of guy who usually gets his way."

At that moment the telephone rang. Judith was horrified. With a great effort she picked up the handset, clearing her throat nervously.

"Hello, darling!" Her old greeting sounded hollow indeed.

"I'm just up town a little way. Don't suppose I ought to come down, it's so late." Dudley's voice was definitely pleading.

Judith steeled herself to the deception. "Perhaps not, I'm ready for bed right now."

"Anything wrong, dear?"

"No, nothing. I'm just tired."

As she talked, Tex watched her with seeming amusement. When she finished, he was laughing. "You've improved since you left me. You're better at excuses."

Her face was white with anger. "I regret the necessity!"

Tex sat down with elaborate carelessness as Judith said, "I'm very tired, Tex. I just finished work. You wanted to see me. Please make it short, for I must get to bed."

"Very business-like, aren't you?"

"I'm a business woman now."

"And doing very well for yourself." He glanced around the apartment. "Not that this is much, but I suppose you'll be moving into a cafe society shortly."

Judith was not to be put off. "Why did you want to see me?" Her eyes met his squarely. She was in no mood for appeasement. So he said abruptly: "I've got to have $5,000 and you're going to get it for me."

Judith stared at him in surprise. "Where in the world do you think I'm going to get $5,000?" she demanded heatedly.

"From Dudley, of course!" came the prompt, explicit answer.

Judith was suddenly afraid of Tex. His eyes blazed. He was like a man possessed. He'd gone quite mad! But no, it was the whiskey. It was difficult to handle Tex at best. She was uncertain just what to do.

"You are being ridiculous," she managed.

Tex stood there looking at her as though she were a stranger. "Young woman, I have to have a racing ship. I can get one for $4,000. Another thousand will fix it up."

She shook her head. "The only way I can excuse your coming here tonight is that you're drunk." The scorn in her voice seemed to cut through the alcohol.

"Be careful. I might lose my temper." His hands were clenched at his sides. Judith despised that thin smile on his lips. But she had to get him out of her apartment without waking everybody on her floor. The walls were none too thick. She must appease him.

Her voice was more conciliatory when she spoke next. "It might be a good idea for you to go home and sleep. We can talk about it some time when you're more yourself."

"Home?" Tex laughed loud and Judith tried to make him be quiet.

"I won't shush. Home! I haven't any. I haven't even a place to sleep tonight. She took everything. Kicked me out like a dog!"

He dropped into a chair and began to weep helplessly. Judith watched him, horror-stricken. It seemed incredible that he could have changed so much. But there was nothing she could do. Her one desire was to get him to leave.

"I'm sorry, Tex. Go along now, like a good boy. I'll give you money for a hotel room. Tomorrow—"

"No, tonight! I want that money and I'm going to get it."

He changed swiftly from a broken man to a desperate one. His words came in rushes: "I've got to have it, I tell you. I'm going to show her. I've got plans. I'll paint my name higher than it's ever been before! I'll make her sorry! I'll have her come back to me on her knees!"

"Tex, your voice! Please keep it down!"

"Cut that talk! You're going to listen to what I have to say."

"If you don't leave at once, I'll call the police."

Tex laughed. "Oh, no, you won't! Wouldn't that be nice to see in the morning papers that the important Michael Dudley's coming bride had to have her ex-husband put out of her apartment at midnight. Nice! You'd look pretty in a police court!"

He laughed again at the fear in her eyes. "You don't like that, do you? You want your cake! Well, you can have it, but you're going to cut me in!"

Judith hated him then, utterly and completely. "Just a minute, Tex. Will you get this straight? I love Michael. That is why I am marrying him."

Tex laughed uproariously. "Love him? Of course, you don't. You love me. You always will. I know that. Why do you suppose I am here?"

Judith was desperate. "We can't go on like this all night. I've got to be at work early. Tomorrow—"

"Tonight! I'm going to have your pledge. You're going to make Dudley come through."

Tex laughed uproariously. "Love him? Of course, you don't. You love me. You always will. I know that. Why do you suppose I am here?"

Judith was desperate. "We can't go on like this all night. I've got to be at work early. Tomorrow—"

"Tonight! I'm going to have your pledge. You're going to make Dudley come through."

Tex laughed uproariously. "Love him? Of course, you don't. You love me. You always will. I know that. Why do you suppose I am here?"

Judith was desperate. "We can't go on like this all night. I've got to be at work early. Tomorrow—"

"Tonight! I'm going to have your pledge. You're going to make Dudley come through."

Judith's anger made her throw all caution to the winds. "Get this straight! I will not ask Michael for one cent for you. If he had millions I wouldn't ask him! I haven't any money myself. So what are you going to do?"

Tex looked at her speculatively. Then his eyes fell on her ring. "Nice ice, that!"

It was Judith's turn to break. "You can't!"

"Oh, can't I?" He came toward her slowly. "I'm going to take that ring. I'm going to keep it unless you kick through with the five grand."

Tex grabbed her hand and Judith began to struggle noisily as he jeered. "Be quiet, you'll wake the neighbors!"

Judith, using all her strength, fought him off. She fell against the table. The lamp crashed to the floor, the bulb exploding into a hundred pieces.

They stood facing each other, Tex with Judith's left arm bent under. "I heard somebody at the door," she whispered. "Let me go!"

But he wrenched her arm back unmercifully, until she moaned. Then he tore the ring from her finger and put it into his pocket. A knock. There was somebody there!

In the dim light of the room, the two stared at each other. Tex bent her arm back sharply and whispered into her ear. "Ask who it is?"

Judith's voice was faint as she called: "Who's there?"

"It's Michael Dudley, Judith. Let me in."

Tex's lips were on her ear. "Tell him you're undressed and to go away."

He wrenched her arm again. "I'm sorry, but—I'm in bed."

Michael's voice was low as he replied through the door: "Open the door or I'll break it in!"

She tried to get away from Tex. "Open it, I say!" Michael's voice was a ringing command. Tex dropped Judith's arm. She held it, for he had hurt her cruelly. He said: "Wait, till I get in the bathroom. I'll lock the door."

Then Judith let Michael into the room. Her face was chalk white; her eyes pleaded with him; he looked at the broken lamp, Judith's hair, her sleeve torn, and the blood on her hand. She was holding her injured arm. He went to the bathroom door.

"Come out of there, Tex Aimes!"

There was no answer. Dudley tried the knob.

"Come out of there. I've got a gun. I'll shoot through the door if you don't." There was another silence. Dudley put his hand in his coat pocket. Judith gave an agonized cry:

"Michael! Don't! Don't!" He did not seem to hear her.

"I'll give you five seconds to open that door, Tex." Dudley's voice was like steel striking steel.

Slowly the bathroom door swung open. Tex stood there, saw Dudley's hand in his coat pocket.

"Come out here!" Dudley motioned with his pocketed hand. Tex obeyed. "Sit down."

Tex slumped into a chair. Judith tried to speak. "You keep out of this, Judith. This is between Tex and me," Dudley ordered.

"Blackmail is not a nice word, Tex," said Michael with grim deliberation.

"I had to have money."

"Why didn't you come to me?"

"You wouldn't have let me in your office. I was there today and your girl turned me down."

"I was not in."

"You lie!"

Dudley smiled grimly. "I don't have to lie to you."

His voice put Tex on the defensive: "You kicked me out of my job, just because you wanted my wife. You stole her."

"Don't be a fool!"

"You'll see how much of a fool I am! I'll put your name and Judith's on the front page of every paper in this country. What about your fine new job then? I'll see you're black-balled just as I am."

Dudley ignored the tirade, requested Judith to make some coffee. She hurried to do so. He sat down in front of Tex, his hand still in his coat pocket. The only sound which broke the stillness of the apartment was the sputtering of the coffee.

Becker Farms, Bristol, Pa.- A $200,000 Yearly Produce Business

tables for you and your family, at the least possible expense. Incidentally, the next time you go to your local storekeeper, you may be amazed to know of the effort and professional ability expended in the one purpose of offering you the greatest assortment of fresh vegetables in the whole world—for your own table. But let's be on.

As we understand it, the vast area covered by the extensive Becker Farms, is all located on what is known as "river bottom soil." Just what sections of this great country possess the best soil for vegetable growing, is a highly controversial question, but to our way of thinking, proof of the vegetable is the eating thereof, and until you have tasted Becker Farms beets, celery and hush limas, to name but a few, you will just have to agree with us that the particular Bucks County area is exactly "what the doctor ordered."

However, it is one thing to have good soil, but quite another to keep it that way. In the first place, Becker Farms will soon enjoy the enviable honor of a half century of vegetable growing, and the soil is better than ever!

And here is the very best reason we can give you as to why Owner Becker is an acknowledged leader in his profession. On a rigidly regulated system, the river bottom soil is chemically analyzed, and at that time, if certain ingredients are lacking, the missing element is applied to the soil. So the next time you try to grow bush limas in your six by eight truck patch in your back yard, and the results are a bit weird, just picture adding fertilizer, not once, but three times a year, to your 200 acres. But before you even do that, you must have a knowledge of the soil that might include four years in an agricultural college, plus some 20 years of practical farming, not to mention the proper vegetable seeds, cultivation, insect pests, and who will keep the weeds down when you are on your vacation?

In this day and age, most of us think of streamline trains, airplanes, and fast automobiles as the symbols of speed. But we wonder how many realize that the farmer is away head of most all and everything in really making a business hustle. We have in mind the startling fact that the Becker Farms actually get three crops a season from 1 piece of soil. By that statement is meant the highly specialized practice of rotation. In other words, were the farming area to actually cover 600 acres, at the end of a season 1800 acres would have been consumed. So the next time some westerner starts to boast of big time farming, just bury him under a quarter of a million bushels of Becker Farms vegetables.

When most of us do our spring planting, we first hustle to the seed store and bring home perhaps a dozen packets (ounces) of various selections. Just for the sport of the thing, would you venture to guess the amount of seeds purchased annually by Mr. Stanley Becker? Would you guess thirty thousand pounds. Remember that seeds average, let us say, fifteen cents an ounce, meaning that a pound would cost plenty. Anyway, the seed order out there at Bristol doesn't run to pounds, but rather tons, and more tons! Whew, we can still remember the cost of a ton of coal from the past winter, but to buy the finest vegetable seeds on the same scale - - - what a menu.

Up to this point we have prepared the soil, and obtained the seeds. Next comes the task of making the weeds vacate. Odd as it may seem although we personally inspected countless fields of the Becker Farms, not so much as a single weed was in evidence.

Again, the modern trend is much in vogue, as there is not even a single horse on the property. Truly, Proprietor Becker certainly sticks to a vegetarian establishment, as motor propelled tractors do just about everything but talk to the loamy soil.

At this point we asked Mr. Becker how he licked the aged bromide of blackbirds and their alleged notorious appetite for domestic seeds. To be frank about it, it was our surmise that a "scarecrow" was probably "planted" every hundred yards. Hmm, and were we wrong! Listen, we were advised in very certain terms that all birds, and by golly, ye blackbirds in particular, were the best free laborers on the Becker Farms. Why? Because these insect eaters eat twice their weight daily, or something like that, as most bird lovers well know. So it goes without saying that the song "Bye, Bye, Blackbird" is not a popular number in certain sections of Bucks County.

Of course, the best answer to the weed problem is intensive cultivation, and it is a fetching sight to see fleets of Becker Farms tractors fairly humming all over the country. One bustling member of the Becker family made a huge modern tractor the size of a Mack truck, turn around on a dime and start down an adjoining farrow quicker than a Yellow cab could do a "U" turn at Twelfth and Market streets. The chap was the color of bronze, and wore one of those pith type hats, the kind you see in the movies, depicting darkest Africa, despite the brightest tropic sunlight known to man!

And so the soil is prepared, the seed planted, the plants cultivated, and next comes the stupendous task of picking the vegetables, and preparing them for market. Beg pardon, there is one other detail that goes to growing good, vegetables up there in Bensalem township, and that is the constant problem of water, especially during the dry summer months.

Bear in mind that while you are pampering two rows of carrots the entire summer, the Becker Farms create three rotations a season which means that the normal speed of growth must be aided, or better, speeded up three times the average. Water is one of the answers, and plenty of it.

The watering system as created by Mr. Stanley Becker is entirely too involved for our amateur digression, as to our way of thinking, it would make an army of plumbers, and twice the tools they forgot, to make the system work. Merely a little detail of distributing 600 gallons of water a minute, all night long, over an area about the size of Jenkintown proper. The next time you put your hose on your lawn for about twenty minutes, while waiting for your wife to get ready for the movies, and you are mentally thinking of the water meter doing hand springs, picture a small river of water soaking your vegetables, accompanied by a huge crew working on a night shift, until dawn. Yes, the task of getting fresh Becker Farms vegetables to your table is big time business.

Experienced farm crews tackle the huge and highly important job of properly picking Becker vegetables. As the various assortments become ready, different procedures are carried out. For example, it is one problem to take a knife and cut 200,000 bushels of spinach, and quite another activity to pick 10,000 bushels of cucumbers. Over 300 employees are on the payroll at Becker Farms. Goodness, imagine peeling potatoes for dinner!

The above illustrations best tell you how the vegetables are collected in huge sheds, or barns, placed on endless conveyor belts, and eventually sorted, washed and precooled into baskets, all marked with the impressive Becker Farms insignia. While the pictures show how spinach is handled, practically the same routine is carried out for the entire line of Becker Farms products.

Next comes the all important problem of getting the packed vegetables to your table with the least possible delay. Becker Farms foodstuffs are delivered by fleets of high powered trucks, nightly, to the following cities: Philadelphia (good old Dock street at dawn), New York City, Boston, Baltimore, the Nation's Capitol, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati. If you are strong on geography it will suddenly occur to you that just the gasoline bill for delivering fresh vegetables to you fresh, is not "hay."

Vegetables featured by the Becker Farms are the following popular selections: spinach, string beans, lima beans, carrots, beets, cucumbers, parsnips, canteloupes, celery and turnips. As to magnitude, last season Mr. Becker planted 50 acres of cucumbers, realizing over 10,000 bushels of the product; 250 acres of string beans, receiving close to 50,000 bushels in return, and, well, enough for statistics, except to add the total last year, of all vegetables, exceeded a quarter of a million bushels of food.

Where were we? Oh, yes, at this point the Becker Farms products are right here in the Borough so to speak, at your favorite grocery store. An inquiry on your part for Becker Farms vegetables would definitely confirm the point, but our purpose is to only tell you about the fresh vegetables you may have for your own table.

Today, it is quite proper to know the health value of a given food. With this thought in mind, we are listing here the chemical contents of several popular vegetables grown by the Becker Farms. Obviously, your doctor is the authority for just what you should eat, meaning that we are not posing as a physician, but rather, a presentment of facts, for your consumption, should you so wish.

Let's take spinach. Medical figures would indicate that on a pound basis, calories number 109, vitamins A, B, C, G, Proteins 2.1%, and the most popular ingredient of all, iron, .00255 per cent. Goodness, Becker Farms as Mr. Rector advises that there is last year produced over 130,000 bushels of spinach, or probably enough iron to put the Frankford Arsenal out of business!

Another demanded summer vegetable is the lima bean. Medical charts indicate that Mr. Bean contains, on a pound basis, almost 600 calories, carbohydrates (what's zat?) 22.0%, and we'll let you in on a deep secret, fats, 7%. If your appetite operates by a rigid diet, no doubt your doctor can easily give you a complete chart showing the chemical contents of just about all and everything that is placed on your table. We mentioned but two vegetables to better bring out the thoroughness in which the Becker Farms operate for your good health.

Next, and last, is the always fascinating problem of just how to best serve fresh vegetables. We refer you to none other than Mr. George Rector, who has prepared a complete book, printed by the Rector Publishing Company, New York City, in which vegetables are featured in part. It is taken for granted, by the way, that you know that Chef Rector is accepted the world over as probably the finest kitchen operator in this country.

So, Mr. Rector says this of vegetables, "Finicky appetites can readily be tucked into more sturdy dimensions by judicious use of a bit of artistry, in both color and formula, in serving green vegetables." And among a huge selection of vegetable menus, Chef Rector suggests this one: Glazed Carrots, scrape and cut the carrots ball shape. Cook in boiling salted water twenty minutes. Drain, melt four tablespoons of butter in frying pan and add four tablespoons of granulated sugar. When blended add drained carrots and cook until brown and glazed.

Or how about "Spinach en Casserole." Incidentally, there is NO sand in Becker Farms spinach. On second thought, you probably know well how to prepare the suggestion, except that it is important that no water is added.

sufficient moisture in the spinach leaves and stems to cook properly. Also, such a procedure is especially good for children as it is rich in lime of calcium and iron, due to the fact that the spinach has been cooked in its own juice and no water has been drained off. But let's slip to Bristol for a quick moment, and then we will be off to market, with a capital "B."

Included in the more than $200,000 in equipment necessary to handle the many products of the Becker Farms are 20 trucks and eleven tractors. And here, it might be well to state that to keep this equipment in order requires an all-year-round staff of three mechanics and a blacksmith.

Total output of the Becker Farms in 1939 represented an income of more than $200,000 and in line with this, the payroll necessary to prepare the vegetables for market represented in this large return was an item of more than $75,000 alone. That's big business in any man's language.

Should you wish to personally see the huge Becker Farms, the best way is to drive out the Roosevelt Boulevard, past Byberry Institute, and at the first intersection, take Route 132 directly to the right. Immediately you will be entering a section of vast fields under intensive cultivation. As you come to Becker road, an attractive little home advises "Gateway," or the "friendly welcome" of the Becker Farms. From that point you will immediately observe one of the huge vegetable barns, with the attractive "B" monogram on the side.

Caution is suggested however, on calling Sundays, as it so happens that the very nature of the business makes Sunday the busiest day of the week, in that foodstuffs are delivered fresh the country over, the first thing Monday morning, whereas Saturdays are rest days, if there is such a word in the farming game!

But in the meantime, our market list to our groceryman includes specified Becker Farms vegetables, because we know they are positively fresh, and good, too. Let's eat.

No. 1—The first step in preparation for market—picking. The worker uses a sharp knife.

No. 2—Partial view of 600-acre Becker Farms where 100 men are working.

No. 3—A truck load of spinach brought from the field is unloaded onto automatic conveyor where it is washed and sorted.

No. 4—Spinach on conveyor is re-washed and packed in baskets which descend from overhead. Note man at extreme left with bucket. That contains ice and one bucketful is placed in each basket.

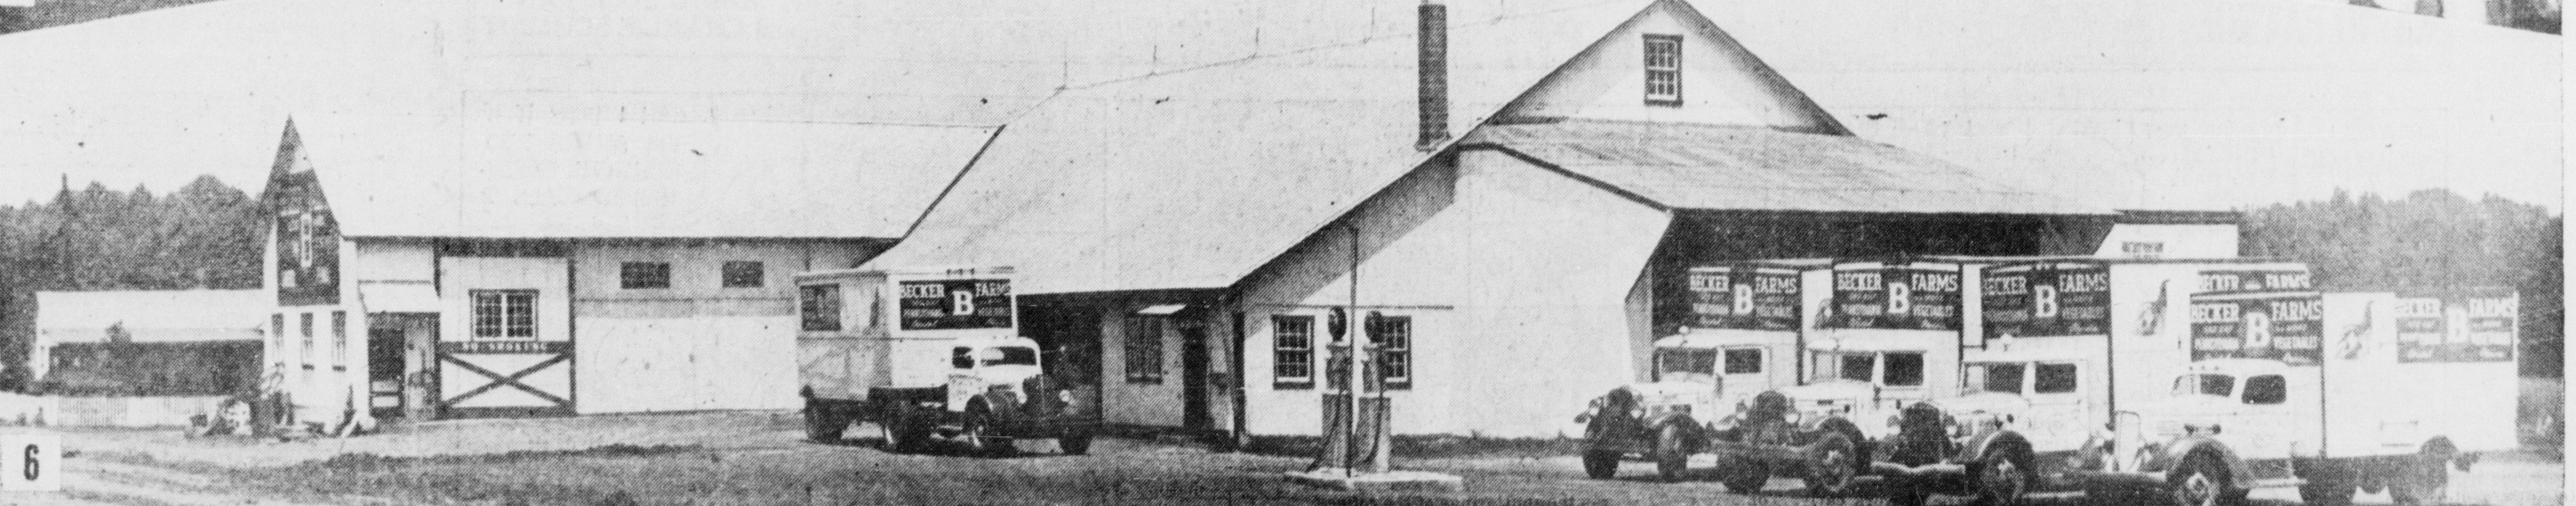

No. 5—The "business end" of the conveyor. Here it is that the lids are placed on the baskets and they are ready to be loaded in the trucks shown in the photo below.

No. 6—The Becker Farms fleet shown in front of the building which houses the packing and shipping equipment, refrigeration equipment and office facilities. All detail work is handled from this location.

SPECIAL TO READERS OF THIS NEWSPAPER

Visitors are welcome at Becker Farms at any time. However, it is suggested in planning these visits that you consider that there is very little activity on Saturday, and that Sunday is a particularly active day, because of the opening of the markets early Monday morning and shipments leave Becker Farms in time to meet this market.

BRIDES MUST KNOW HOW TO COOK MEATS

Choosing The Right Cooking Method for Each Cut Is An Important Step

Good food, so 'tis said, is the way to a man's heart. Be that as it may, many a June bride is impressed with the old saying and is wondering what she ought to do about it. Here is some help from Inez S. Willson, home economist, on one of the knottiest culinary problems for the inexperienced cook—buying and preparing meat.

The important principle in meat cookery is to choose the right cooking method for each cut. Those cuts which are less tender or which require long, slow cooking for best results are cooked by moist heat—that is, they are braised or cooked in water. Other cuts are cooked by roasting, broiling or panbroiling.

Here is an outline of these standard methods of meat cookery and the cuts of meat most successfully prepared by each.

Roasting

Suitable cuts: Ribs of beef; loin, shoulder and leg (ham) of pork; leg and shoulder of lamb; leg, loin, ribs and shoulder of veal.

Method:
1. Season meat.
2. Insert meat thermometer.
3. Place fat side up in an open oven.
4. Put in slow oven (300-350 degrees F.) and roast until done.

Broiling

Suitable cuts: Tender steaks of beef and beef patties; shoulder, rib and loin chops of lamb and lamb patties; smoked ham slice and bacon.

Method:
1. Set oven regulator at broil.
2. Place meat on rack and allow 3 inches between top of meat and source of heat.
3. Brown well, season and turn.
4. Brown second side.

Panbroiling

Cuts cooked by broiling are also suitable for panbroiling.

Method:
1. Season meat on both sides.
2. Reduce heat.
3. Turn frequently.
4. Pour off fat as it collects in pan.

Braising

All cuts of beef not adapted to the above dry heat methods may be braised. Other suitable cuts are pork chops, steaks, tenderloin and sundries; lamb neck slices, breast, shank, shoulder cuts and sundries; veal steak, chops, breast, shoulder cuts, leg cuts and sundries.

Method:
1. Season meat.
2. Brown well in hot lard.
3. Add a little hot water; cover.
4. Cook slowly on stove or in oven, until tender.

Cooking in Water

Stewing and simmering come under this classification. A stew involves cutting meat in small cubes, adding water to cover and simmering until the meat is tender. Larger pieces of meat suitable for simmering are also just covered with water and allowed to simmer until tender. The water should not boil. In both cases any vegetables which are added are put in to cook just long enough before serving for them to become tender.

Suitable cuts for stewing: Fore shank, brisket, neck, plate, short ribs, chuck, flank, kidney and heel of round of beef; neck, breast, shoulder, flank and kidney of lamb and veal.

Suitable cuts for simmering: Neck, shank, heel of round, plate, brisket, short ribs of fresh beef; rump, plate, brisket or tongue of corned beef; ham, shoulder, spareribs of smoked pork; heart and spareribs of fresh pork; neck, shank, heart and tongue of veal.

FOOD FACTS IN A NUTSHELL

Cabbage Cases

Although warmed over cabbage does not make a very palatable dish, any cabbage left from a first serving can be used to advantage as a wrapper in which to fry or bake small portions of finely chopped meat of any kind.

Protein in Buttermilk

Surprising as it may seem buttermilk has a food value comparable to meat. Almost half the percentage of food value in buttermilk is protein and a pint of average richness contains almost as much nourishment as two and a half ounces of beef.

Dates in Variety

Dates grow in surprising variety there being about 125 different kinds. The three most important are the Hallowi, which is a brown date, and

FOOD MARKET

Advice

THIS is the season when the wise housekeeper will emulate the art and take thought of the winter to come. In the midst of such a wealth of fresh fruits and vegetables it is an excellent idea to fill pantry shelves with home-made pickles, preserves and canned vegetables against the time when they may not be so plentiful or so low in price.

Vegetable and fruit stands this week are literally ablaze with color from a profusion of yields from orchards and gardens. Many of these items have been brought from 1,500 miles away, thanks to the efficient methods of mass merchandising developed by the chain stores. Among the particularly good buys in fruits this week are watermelon, plums, peaches, blackberries and apples all of which are excellent for preserving and canning. In the vegetable department beets, carrots, several varieties of beans, squash and tomatoes are quite low in price and the majority of these are fine for canning.

Fish Supply Good

Fishermen in the waters along the Eastern seaboard have been hauling in nets filled with croakers, porgies, butterfish, bass, scrod, haddock and pollack this week and these can all be converted into delicious main dishes for hot weather menus. The supply of salmon is increasing and prices are somewhat lower than they were last week. On an especially hot day plan a cold salmon plate and watch the appreciative reaction of your family. Surround the boiled salmon with stuffed eggs, tomatoes filled with cottage cheese, celery, radishes and olives all placed on a bed of lettuce and serve with it small bread and butter sandwiches or some form of hot bread. You will find you have turned your meal into a gala occasion. Fish can be used for all sorts of baked dishes either by itself or combined with potatoes and vegetables, so that you can also cut your cooking down to a minimum.

Another excellent buy this week is beef, hinds and fores being even more moderately priced than they were last week. All cuts of lamb are lower this week, and a roast of lamb can be converted into a delicious baked hash with a pastry top for a second serving.

The supply of eggs is more plentiful this week and the quality fine. So this would be a good time to make use of those dessert recipes which call for eggs.

Here is a menu for Sunday dinner based on excellent buys in the market this week:

Roast Duckling

Mashed Potatoes

Baked Squash

Pickled Beets

Bread and Butter

Iced Watermelon

Iced Tea or Iced Coffee

the Siyr and Frad, which are black dates.

Distances Eliminated

So efficient is the modern system of mass merchandising developed by the chain stores that foodstuffs can be transported great distances without adding appreciably to their cost. For instance, the average haul on fruits and vegetables is 1,500 miles, yet items in this category formerly only available to the woman in the upper income brackets now are available at prices within reach of modest budgets.

American Pie Eaters

Americans are the world's biggest pie eaters, consuming 450,000,000 a year. Apple pie is the first choice, rare tied for second place and cherry is coconut custard and lemon meringue a close fourth.

Coffee Good For Many Delectable Summer Desserts

An old standby of the breakfast table, coffee, is frequently ignored when desserts are planned. Yet, coffee can be used as the basis of a variety of delicious summer desserts, which are simple to make and can be prepared in advance—always an excellent talking point for a hot weather sweet.

The aromatic flavor of the coffee will also frequently provide just the right touch to top off a summer meal. In making coffee desserts be sure that you use a good grade of coffee and have the liquid very strong, otherwise much of the flavor will be lost.

Coffee makes a delicious ice cream, parfait, Spanish cream, sauce for puddings and cakes, and Apiocha cream. Iced coffee, Creole style, is also a dessert in itself. For iced Creole coffee use tall glasses of the parfait type. Allow two level teaspoonfuls of sugar for each cup of coffee. Put the sugar in the glass, add a generous portion of heavy cream, fill half full with crushed ice and pour in the coffee.

Here is a recipe for coffee Spanish cream:

1 tablespoon granulated gelatin
1 cup milk
1 cup strong coffee
½ cup sugar
2 eggs
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

Soak gelatin in one-half cup milk for five minutes. Combine remaining milk, coffee and one-third cup sugar and bring to boil. Pour over gelatin and stir until dissolved. Separate eggs, beat yolks slightly and pour hot coffee mixture over them slowly, stirring constantly. Cook in top of double boiler, over boiling water, stirring constantly until mixture thickens slightly and coats spoon, about five minutes. Remove from heat. Add salt to egg whites and beat to a stiff foam. Add remaining sugar gradually, beating constantly until stiff. Fold into coffee mixture and add vanilla. Chill until mixture starts to set, then beat with an egg beater until thoroughly mixed. Put into sherbert or parfait glasses and chill until firm. Served with sweetened whipped cream.

CLEAN AS YOU GO IN ORDER TO KEEP WEEKLY JOBS SIMPLE

Home Economics Representative. One keep-clean is better than a dozen make-cleans in the kitchen. It's easier to keep order after every meal, than to spend a whole day scrubbing and scouring after a week of "letting things go."

While vegetables are cooking or a cake is baking, take advantage of the spare minutes to put supplies back where they belong. Clear the work shelf and table as they are used.

A handy shelf for cleaning supplies inspire kitchen cleanliness. Stock the cleaning shelf with a mild neutral soap, a fine kind of scouring powder that doesn't scratch and a metal sponge or fine steel wool for cleaning stubborn spots.

The kitchen sink needs constant attention to spare the finish from a harsh scouring. If there are spots that will not respond to soap and water, rub them with a fine scouring powder. Never use a gritty powder or lye—the powder will scratch the finish and lye will almost eat it off. Then the sink will be harder than ever to clean.

or washing with soap and water will keep the chromium plating on a modern plumbing fixture clean. But the older types of plumbing fixtures may need occasional polishing with a fine scouring powder.

For the weekly cleaning of the refrigerator, use mild soap suds with a little soda added to help remove odors. First take out all the food. Then remove the shelves and wash them, as well as the inside of the box. Finally rinse with clear water. If yours is an ice refrigerator, pay special attention to the drain pipe. Remove the pipe and drain trap, then wash and scald them carefully to kill any bacteria.

Wiping the stove regularly makes weekly cleaning quite simple.

Silver needs special care because it is a soft metal. It will tarnish less quickly if it is rinsed carefully and dried with a clean towel. Tarnish may be removed by boiling the silver in a salt and soda solution in an aluminum utensil, then polished with a piece of chamol or soft cloth. Or silver may be cleaned with a good grade of silver polish that does not scratch.

Additional suggestions for cleaning in the kitchen and in other parts of the house can be found in the Pennsylvania State College circular 183, "Household Care and Cleaning." This circular is available free from the Agricultural Extension Office in Doylestown.

BRISTOL THEATRE

Double portions of mystery, action and comedy are contained in Universal's "Honeymoon Deferred," which opened yesterday at the Bristol Theatre.

Edmund Lowe and Margaret Lindsay in the starring roles appear as the detective and his bride whose honeymoon is interrupted by the suspected murder of Lowe's wealthy employer.

"Women in War," a timely and thought-provoking Republic drama, made its debut locally at the Bristol Theatre last night and was favorably received by the audience, which enjoyed the stimulating performances of Miss Elsie Janis.

GRAND THEATRE

And so, ladies and gentlemen, the mysterious Susan comes back from Europe with her even more mysterious surprise. What is it? Well, "Susan and God," which opens today at the Grand Theatre, will tell you the answer. Joan Crawford is the resplendent Susan in this picturization of the celebrated Rachel Crothers' Broadway hit, "Freddie March is her inebriate husband, Barrie, and around them Metro-Goldwyn-

Mayer has assembled one of the greatest "name" casts of the season.

Ruth Hussey is the family friend, Charlotte, in love with Barrie. Rita Hayworth is the young actress, Leonora, who married the much older business man, Hutchie, played by Nigel Bruce, and Leonora regrets her marriage because of the young actor, Clyde, played by John Carroll. Rose Hobart is Irene, the hostess at whose house party much of the action takes place, and Mike O'Hara, the young sportsman whom she loves, is played by Bruce Cabot.

RITZ THEATRE

When 20th Century-Fox decided to bring Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" to the screen, production chief Darryl F. Zanuck determined to transform this beautiful and human story into one of the truly great and unforgettable motion pictures of all time.

How magnificently he has succeeded is indelibly recorded in the tremendous acclaim that has met the Technicolor production, which opens today at the Ritz Theatre.

Bristol moviegoers can take a hint from those who saw "The Blue Bird" at the Hollywood Theatre in New York, where it was shown twice daily as a roadshow, with all seats reserved at advanced prices.

"Blondie On A Budget" is also being shown.

HEISLER PITCHES LANDRETH NINE TO A VICTORY

Farmers Defeat Riegel Ridge
Team by Score of
2 to 1

ALLOWED FOUR HITS
Would Have Blanked The Visitors With Good
Support

Landreth Seeds defeated the Riegel Ridge team, Riegelsville, N. J. leader, of the Bi-County League, last night at Landreth Park, 2-1.

Lonnie Heisler pitched for the "Farmers" and with good support would have blanked the visitors. He allowed them four scattered hits and their tally came through an error.

With one out in the visitors' half of the fifth, Rute doubled above the third base line for their first hit when David fumbled Phillips' grounder, he advanced to third. Later Phillips was trapped between first and second, attempting to steal. Rute made a dash for the plate and scored when David threw wild to Harwi.

The Farmers made but four hits off the delivery of Walt Grube who pitched for the Leaguers but bunched them in two innings.

Hits by Lodge and Harwi, David's sacrifice and Rossi's base on balls loaded the bases for Landreth in the second inning and when Griggs grounded to first Lodge scored the first count.

Bill Harwi's two base drive, an out and Rossi's single over second accounted for the second run in the fourth inning.

Harwi made two of the home team's four hits and walked once for perfect batting average.

Landreth will travel to Haddonfield on Saturday.

PAUL PITCHES GOOD GAME AGAINST ST. LUKE'S

EDGELEY, July 25—Giving the best mound performance of the season, "Jake" Paul whitewashed the St. Luke's team last evening on the Edgely diamond, as the Odds continued to remain in a fight for a play-off post in the Bristol Suburban League. Final score stood: Odd Fellows, 6; St. Luke's, 0.

Paul was magnificent in his twirling. He allowed but one hit, that being a single by Beisel in the second. All the other batters that faced Paul were set down without reaching base. In all, Paul struck out ten of the nineteen batters to face him.

While Paul had the losers eating out of his hands, the ultimate winners were getting to Kershaw and Woolfin for nine hits. The Odds scored their markers in pairs, in the first, second, and third innings.

Wilbur Van Leuten with two out of three and Leo Hibbs with two for two led the Odds with the stick.

Kenny Clifton robbed Dougherty of a single in the fifth with a beautiful catch of his short fly to left-center field.

August 24th: Thermoid Rubber Company, of Trenton, on the Trenton courts.

August 31st: Princeton Tennis Club, on the Rohm & Haas courts.

September 7th: Charles Lenning Company, on the Lenning court.

The following players are listed for match games: Dr. Fred Davies, John McGrath, Bob Anderson, Paul Pearson, Sam Sirott, Carl Foell, Jim Gonza, and Gus Freygang.

The Social Club has four courts and these were put in first class condition and the entire courts renovated with superior red clay used as an undercoat and a hard surface put on top of it. The rebuilding of the courts was under the direction of one of Bristol's tennis aces, Herb Lawrence.

Every evening members of the club engage in games and so much interest has been stirred that the club is planning an inter-club tournament.

The public is invited to attend the matches on the above dates and also when the inter-club tourney gets under way.

K. OF C. WINS IN FREE HITTING SOFTBALL GAME

In a free hitting contest, the Knights of Columbus softball team won out over the St. Ann's team, 12-10, on the Pine street diamond. The winners were outbatted by the "Saints" 16-14.

Tommy Eagan and Vince Stefoni went the entire distance for their respective clubs.

Hitting stars in the tilt were Joe Dolan, Eagan, Rip Kelly for the Knights and Pizzullo, Ventriglia, and Fields for St. Ann's. Eagan had a home run and single to his credit.

Accurate throws to the plate by Dates Fogley and Johnny Cole cut off several St. Ann's runs.

PEARSON TO MEET McGRATH TONIGHT

Three matches were played last evening in the Bristol Municipal Tennis Tournament. In the first match of the evening Al Lazavich defeated Sam Sirott 6-1, 8-6. By this victory Lazaravich showed he is to be reckoned with in his match with Davies tonight at six o'clock.

In the second match Johnny McGrath easily beat Tom Friory, 6-1, 6-0.

Bud Pearson will meet with Bradley Ardrey and he and McGrath will meet in the other semi-final tonight at 6 o'clock. The score of their match was 6-4, 6-4.

Two Suburban League Games To Be Played

Two games are scheduled to be played in the Bristol Suburban League this evening. On Landreth's field, Voltz-Pexaco plays Rohm and Haas and at Morrisville, Tullytown meets the King Supply club.

Both Rohm and Haas and Voltz are in the midst of a losing streak, the latter having lost eleven straight games. A victory for King Supply will put that club very close to the league-leading Y. M. A. team.

All Community Softball League games have been cancelled because of the annual "dream" game being played on Leedom's field.

Blood Donors Here Approve Red Cross Plan

American Red Cross to organize nationally blood donors in a defense measure was promised last night by Mrs. Elizabeth Fraim, secretary of the Walter L. Fraim Memorial Blood Donors Association of Lansdowne.

The association, formed in memory of Mrs. Fraim's husband who before his death was Lansdowne's fire chief, now has a contributing membership of 1250 through its affiliation with the Pennsylvania State First Aid Council.

"I am sure that our association will be only too glad to co-operate in any manner with the work of the Red Cross," Mrs. Fraim said. "I can speak with certainty of the original members of the organization and am confident the same co-operation will be extended by the units of the First Aid Council which will officially become part of our organization on Aug. 9 at Willow Grove."

Robert McGovern, president of the council, and Joseph Law, its secretary, offered the services of its 1000 members for blood transfusions to the Lansdowne group last week. The council has 14 units, six in Bucks county, six in Montgomery county and two in Delaware county.

At Easter season the duck was but a duckling, and although not much more than that now, she thinks she is just as big and knows she is just as good and even better at swimming than her pal "Mike," who is four years old. Each evening this strange procession makes its way from the Arnold home, with Mr. Arnold on the lead, "Mike" will not cross the thoroughfare until his master gives the signal that all is well. Then dog follows man, and duck follows dog. Finally, at the bank they dive in the water in that rotation. Occasionally they will swim out to one of the boats moored near shore. One favorite swim is to the mooring place of the yacht of Clarence W. Winter, and when the craft is reached, should Mr. Winter be present, he aids the dog and duck aboard.

Then commences the march, "duck fashion" to the bow of the yacht, with deck five feet above the water. Arnold, by mutual agreement, is the first diver, Mr. "Mike," second; with Madame "Twiddle" bringing up the rear. But her "dive" is really in flying form, but she strikes the water, and then swims with great speed, endeavoring to catch up with her pals. This accomplished she swims around and around Mr. Arnold's head, while the dog leads the way.

"Twiddle," who has been assigned a pen in the rear lawn, is a great pal of "Mike," and obligingly scratches the dog's head and ears which adds to "Mike's" pleasure of his siesta. The cat "Muff," is on good terms with both of the other animals, but definitely doesn't take to water.

"Twiddle" does scorn harness, however, and managed to free herself when Mr. Arnold first placed a set on her. The attempt was never made again.

Japan's Puppet Leaders Worry U. S. Authorities

In the press but in legislative and executive measures and apply the principle of equality and mutual respect, and I will in the interests of friendly relations cease the publication of these unpleasant articles, even against my own sense of right and truth," concludes the Vice Minister.

The Washington State Department comes in for bitter attacks by the Vice Minister when he charges Chiang Kai-shek's National Government at Chungking with being "America's loyal servant."

In asserting that America raises objection to Sino-Japanese cooperation, Mr. Tang gives the reason, "America believes that Sino-Japanese cooperation will be harmful to her."

Much of the Vice Minister's bitterness towards America is believed to be personal. In private conversation with Americans he harks back to incidents involving Chinese in the United States nearly a century ago, which have long been considered closed by both the Chinese and American governments.

While defending the new Japanese sponsored regime against the alleged American plot, the Vice Minister went so far in his talks with American correspondents here that the Japanese surrounding the new regime took note of the fact that Mr. Tang was creating too much enmity for their cause and they took him to task.

The Minister of Publicity of the Nanking regime, Lin Pao-sheng, while speaking on the same anti-American lines, is much less violent. He describes his subordinate's utterances as not so much anti-American but as standing for a free and independent China.

Mr. Wang Ching-wei in his proclamations guarantees respect of the legitimate interests and rights of friendly powers and sets his intention to work for better relations with them. He asks that they realize that his is the government of China which should be recognized instead of the Chungking Government.

Despite these more cautious pronouncements, Wang Ching-wei permits Vice Minister Tang to direct his barbs against America.
